AN HISTORIC ACT.

How Schurz Rescued a Prisoner

Friend.

One of the romantic incidents in the life of Carl Sheurz is connected with the daring escape from the Fortress of Spandeau, a Prussian prison nine miles from Berlin. Spandau is famous as being the prison from which Baron Trenck es-caped about a century ago. Schurz and Dr. John Gottfried Kinkel were prominent actors in the revolutionary move-ments which agitated Germany in 1848. In that year Kinkel occupied the post of Art History at the University of Bonn, and Schurz, then a youth of nineteen, was his pupil. They both entered hear-tily into the political movements of the time. When the revolution was put down Schurz got away, but Kinkel was captured, tried, and sentenced to death by a court-mastial. At the earnest and persistent intercession of his wife Kinkel's sentence was commuted to impris-onment for life, and after some time he was conveyed to permanent quarters at Spandau. Schurz had fled to Switzerland, but when he heard of the fate of his friend he secretly returned to Prussia determined to secure his release. The prison is on an island in the river Havel.

and Schurz succeeded in secreting a boat and suitable disguises on the river not far from the citadel. Kinkel's wife and her waiting woman were permitted at times to visit him. When all had been arranged on the outside so that he could arranged on the outside so that he could escape easily from the island he went out one evening in November, 1850, passed the guards in his wife's clothes, accompanied by the waiting-woman. Going to the appointed place he found Schurz ready for him. They successfully made their way to the seacoast, and thence passed over to Scotland.

Since the history of medicine a true Specific for Syphilitic Disease has been sought for but never found until the discovery of our MAGIG REMEDT. We havevery reason to believe that it is absolutely unknown to any physician, specialist or chemist tiving, either in this or the oil world.

It was discovered by mere accident thirteen years ago by a man of no financial means but a natural chemist, who only used it in a quiet way in cases coming to his notice where sufferers could get no relief, though thoroughly trying every known remedy and employing the most skillful physicians in the land, who had ultimately pronounced these cases incurable.

The remody here advertised has been guarded with the ultimost secrety since his discovery, until a year ago, when this chemist died process he always had been, and the original formula purchased of his widow. This in brief is the true history of this most wonderful in the WADY CO, therefore have posses-

A Lost Board. What has become of the Council Bluffs board of trade? Does any one in this city know if such an organization is in existence here? Several persons who have exceedingly good memories are under the impression that new officers were elected at the last meeting of that body, but what became of them no one seems willing to acknowledge. They haven't been heard of for nearly a year and it might be well to advertise for them. It is no fault of theirs, but for some unseen cause Council Buffs has been steadily going ahead and everybody who has traveled through Iowa says this city has improved by far, more than any other city. Possibly it would be better not to waken the slumbering board of trade and let well enough alone.

Too Neighborly. There was a siugging game on Franklin avenue on Sunday which came to light yesterday morning in 'Squire Biggs'

It appears there is a row of four tenements in which two sick ladies reside, each in houses adjoining one another. In an adjoining house Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Elkey reside. According to statements, Mrs. Elkey has been exceedingly noisy, but whether maliciously or naturally does not appear. At any rate, two different doctors attending the sick ladies have addoctors attending the sick ladies have advised quiet, but the noise arising from the next door neighbor has been anything but pleasant for those indisposed. Apparently without any cause, other than a polite request for quiet, the husband on Sunday jumped on to E. C. Whittlesey when he was in the yard and beat him unmercifully about the head. Mrs. Whittlesey was up stairs in bed, almost unable to move, but she exerted herself enough to go down stairs and pull Elkey off her husband.

Justice Biggs fined Elkey $10 and costs yesterday, and he willingly put up the required amount. His only excuse was that his wife told him that Whittlesey had talked to her in an insulting manner, which Whittlesey stoutly denies.

Police Court Pickings. Yesterday morning the business in the police court was very light. Several drunks were discharged, while a couple were fined, the time of the court being occupied principally in ferreting out the cause of so much trouble recently on Lincoln avenue between the children of several families.

The Lincoln avenue difficulties were of a triangular nature. Mrs. Mary Cran-eky, as near as the judge could get her name, appeared with her nine-year-old daughter, who was charged with beat-ing the daughter of Nick Waugh. It appeared from the start that Mrs. Crancky had acted as second in her child's behalf, and the judge continued the case for one week, hoping in the meantime the mother would see that her child's behavior was for the better. The child didn't know right from wrong and appeared as fearless of the judge as of the children with whom she had battled. She told him that if the others would stop their fighting she would, but he must see that they behaved themselves.

Mrs. Craneky then turned plantiff in a case against the Frye boys. She charged them with fighting with her children. As they had several witnesses while she had been they were discovered to the state of the state while she had none, they were dis-charged after admitting having thrown, on one occasion, a chunk of mud at her son, after which she came to her son's rescue with a revolver. Mrs. Craneky shot off her tongue in her native language very freely and the judge suggested to the interpreter to "shut her off, if you can," but it had no noticeable effect.

The case of William T. Farrell, of Underwood, who was arrested by Detective Price at the Milwaukee passenger depot for being disorderly and biockading the platform was continued, as Farrell, although in the city, failed to put in an appearance. If he does not appear this morning his $10 appearance money will go into the city coffer.

A. Dillabough paid $5 for the privilege of "smashing" one Joseph in the face.

A Trunk Factory. Messrs. Zimmerman and Young Bros., of Blythedale, Mo., have leased the building No. 542 Broadway, and are removing to that location. They are the owners of the Zimmerman automatic trunk and anticipate a large trade in their line. They will manufacture their patent trunk, which is made of trays. As the lid of these trunks are raised each one of the enclosed trays raises with the lid, thereby offering an opportunity to get at the bottom of the trunk as well as at the top by simply raising the lid. They have sold in Kansas City alone seven car-loads of these trunks since April 1 and after they these trunks since April 1, and after they are located here expect to do a large obbing business, this being such a fine distributing point. Besides manufacturing their own pat-ent trunks they will continue in the man-ufacture of other trunks, sample cases,

They have been busy making improve-ments on their first patent and until now have been unable to push business, but expect to have several men start out on the road, and show up their goods to the trade. The automatic trunk is especially adapted for the use of ladies and one sight of it is enough to bring an order from most any lady.

It is just such institutions as this, that this city is in need of and if more time were occupied by trying to secure such enterprises by those with the interest of Council Bluffs at heart it would only take a few years before this would become the greatest manufacturing city in this region of the west.

The New Map.

The new map of Council Bluffs and Omaha, prepared by C. R. Allen, the well-known publisher of this city, is now out, and delivering to subscribers will begin to-day. The new map shows up both cities in very convenient and accurate shape. Every lot is marked clearly, and all the new additions are on, together with various other features which have never appeared on any pre-vious map. The new map is particularly valuable because it shows the relative distances and positions of all the points in both cities. One can see at a glance how one city is located in relation to the other. The map will be gladly received in both cities, and already enough subscriptions are taken to nearly exhaust the entire edition. The few surplus ones will readily be taken up. Mr. Allen has done so much map work that it is needless to dwell upon the accuracy of the map, or its completeness. It speaks for itself. and the subscribers cannot but be pleased.

SARAH, THE INDIAN SCOUT.

General Howard Receives Important Aid From an Indian Girl-

The next day, waiting for the scattered companies to come together, says Major General Howard in the Overland Monthly, I was sitting with Captain Bernard at about 5:30 p. m., in a little room at the station, when it was reported that a mounted party was coming towards us from the west. It soon proved to be our messenger to the Piutes, Sarah Winnemucca, with her companions. She came ahead of them, riding very rapidly. At first she could hardly speak for crying, she was so weary and excited.

The following condensed account was crowded into a paragraph and recorded in the journal of the day:

"About 5:30 p. m. Sarah Winnemucca came in, riding fast; had been to hostile camp; brought out her father and brother; others followed and were pursued, overtaken and taken back. She heard firing and fears her brother Lee was killed; says Natches aided the white men to escape from the camp and went with them. She reports Oytes and Egan, with their bands, still detailed in hostile camp; says arms and plunder were offered to tempt them to join the hostiles; then threets and coercion were tried, locates camp near Juni-per lakes, Stein's mountain: gives num-ber at about 700: brought her sister-inlaw into our camp, and implores help for her father, whom she left behind with a few men and guns guarding the fugitive women and children.

I may now add that Sarah's story, so far as subsequent information and evidence could affirm it, proved to be LITERALLY TRUE.

It is of sufficiet historic interest to introduce here a few of those graphic incidents which she herself has since re-

"We (Sarah and the Indians George and John Pintes) followed the trail down the Owyhee river as much as fifteen miles, and then came to where they had camped, and where they been weeping Buffalo Horn (the Bannock leader) had been killed." There were other indicaof great grint hair on the ground; namely, piedes of manta and clothing and numerous beads broken from the strings and strewn around. They found on the trail the whip of the stage driver who had been killed and other articles from time to time, which made the blind trail when crossing the rocky beds easier to follow.

The first ranch the party came to had been owned by a frontier settler, Mr. G. B. Crawley. Everything combustible had been burned, and there were still considerable fire and fresh tracks about the premises. After delaying here to take a little food and rest they determined to follow the fresher of the two branching trails. This led them toward Stein's mountain. That day they picked up a clock and a fiddle and shot a mountain. tain sheep, some strips from which added to their supplies. They were then near Juniper lakes. For five miles further on they caught a glimpse of two people, dressed like Indians, on the slope of the mountain. Sarah's account of this meeting is unique: "As we came nearer to them I said to George, 'Call to them.' He did so. I saw them rise to their feet. I waved my handkerchief at them again, and one of them called out, 'Who are you?' I said, 'Your sister Sarah.' It was Lee Winnemucca, my brother, who had called out. * * * Lee said, Oh, dear sister, you have come to save us, for we are all prisoners of the Bannocks." Her brother represented that her father that his friends had been stripped of guns, horses and blankets, and that there was great peril to life to her and her companions. "For," he said, "they will kill everyone who comes with messages from the weeklers." from the white people, for Indians who come with messages are no friends of ours. They say so every night." Immediately Sarah and her companions were transformed by the using of bankets and putting on of war paint, into Indians proper; then all together they went on to the grand encampment. "The mountain we had to go over was very rocky and steep, almost perpendicular: Sometimes it was very hard for us to climb up on our hands and knees, but we got up at last, and looked into the hostile en-campnent. Oh, such a sight my eyes met! It was beautiful; 327 lodges and 450 warriors." Greater numbers were close at hand; they were down in Little valley catching horses, and some were killing beef. This was part of the united camp of the Bannocks and Plutes. Sadies, you have come to save us.

A little later Sarah had worked her way into her father's lodge containing several Piute men and women. She says "Everyone in the lodge whispered, 'O and her brother succeeded in communi-cating with most of her father's friends. By concentrated action, quite a number estimated at seventy-five in all, left the camp in the night.

They had stopped for a little rest and food, when of a sudden, they saw one of their rear guard RIDING FURIOUSLY toward them. He cried out as he approached: "We are followed by the Rannocks. I saw Lee running and them firing at him. I think he is killed." Of course they mounted at once and rode on course they mounted at once and rode on again.

At this time, finding Winnemucea's column too slow to suit her impatient spirit, Sarah took her sister-in-law and two indians, saying to her father:

"Come, father, give me your orders, as I am going back to the troops. What shall I tell General Howard, as I am going to where he is this very day?"

Winnemuces replied; "Tell him to send his soldless to protect me and my people."

with this message these brave women made the remainder of the distance to the sheep ranch, and reported to me, as I bave previously stated. Bernard's chief of scouts, a Mr. Robbins, was immediately sent with his men to meet the old chief and his party, and bring them to the protection of the troops, to facilitate which Sarah sent Piute Joe as a guide.

I have been this particular in recalling some of the incidents of this ride because of its extraordinary nature. It was a
